ABOVE all the rest, nothing could equal the heroic valour of Jacques de Maillé, a knight of the Temple. Mounted on a white horse, he remained alone in the field of battle, and fought on, surrounded by heaps of slain. Although hemmed in on all sides, he refused to surrender. The horse which he rode, worn out with fatigue and exhausted by wounds, sunk under him, and dragged him with him; but the intrepid knight arose, lance in hand, covered with blood and dust, and bristling with arrows, and rushed upon the ranks of the Mussulmans, astonished at his audacity; at length he fell, covered with wounds, but fighting to the last. The Saracens took him for St. George, whom the Christians believed they saw descend from heaven to join their battalions. After his death the Turkish soldiers, whom an old historian calls The Children of Babylon and Sodom, drew near with signs of respect to his body, slain by a thousand wounds; they wiped off the blood, they shared the rags of his clothes and the fragments of his arms, and, in their brutal excitement, evinced their admiration by actions which make modesty blush when speaking of them.—BOOK VII.

HASTEN then to expiate your sins by victories over the infidels, and let the deliverance of the holy places be the reward of your repentance. . . . If it were announced to you that the enemy had invaded your cities, your castles, and your lands, had ravished your wives and daughters, and profaned your temples, which among you would not fly to arms? Illustrious knights, generous defenders of the cross, remember the example of your fathers who conquered Jerusalem, and whose names are inscribed in heaven; abandon then the things which perish to gather eternal palms, and conquer a kingdom which has no end." All the barons and knights applauded the eloquence of St. Bernard, and were persuaded that he had but uttered the will of God. Louis VII., deeply moved by the words he had heard, cast himself, in the presence of all the people, at the feet of St. Bernard, and demanded the cross.

MASONIC TEMPLE (UTE PASS) COLORADO

A TEMPLE created without trowel or level or square, and yet magnificent in its gigantic proportions, elegant in its majestic outlines, enriched by the elaborate carvings of Time, and matchless in its imperishable solidity.

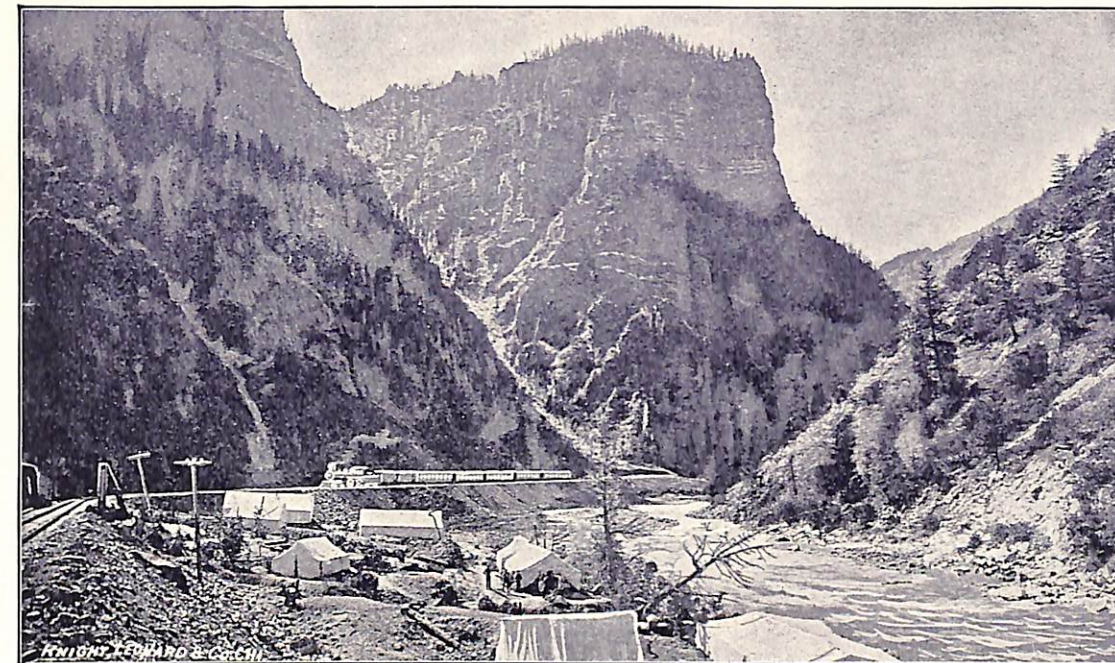

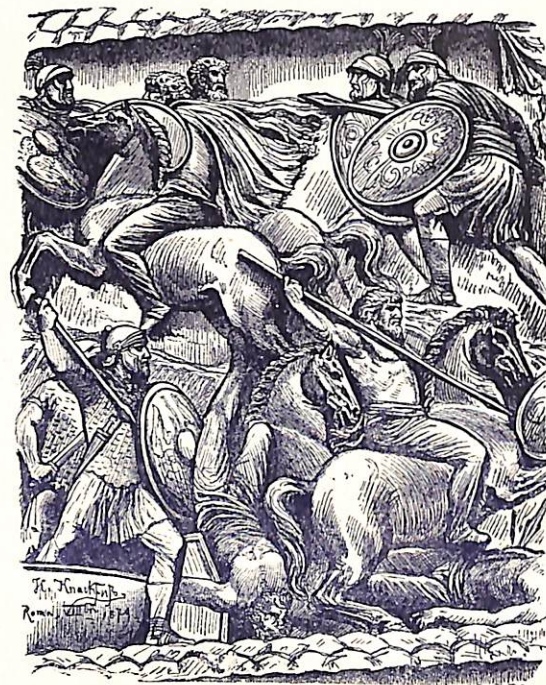

IN BOSTON

ARRIVING in Boston, the Sir Knights will march to headquarters, "Hotel Denver," 545 Massachusetts Avenue. Carriages will be provided to convey the ladies to headquarters, where they will be soon joined by the Sir Knights. Rooms at the Hotel will be assigned previous to arrival at Boston.

At Nantasket Beach

The Imperial Council of the Order of the Mystic Shrine meets at Nantasket Beach the week following the Conclave.

Nantasket Beach has become celebrated as one of the finest ocean shores on the United States coast, presenting as it does, more of the elements which make up the grand, the attractive and the complete in border scenery than are often found combined.

PROCLAMATION

To the Nobility of the Mystic Shrine

The Banners of the great mountain Temple are again unfurled to announce to the faithful followers of Islam the opening of the pathways to the East.

Our spies from the Oasis of Nantasket have reported large caravans from every part of the great American Desert journeying in that direction, that the waters of the mighty deep are calm. The succulent oyster and clam abide therein. The many Zem-Zem wells are full and overflowing; the date trees are loaded with luscious fruit and everywhere Mana abounds.

Our spies in the Oasis of Buffalo, where Bacchus reigns supreme and sheik Gilbert and his tribe have their flocks and their herds and their man servants and their maid servants and their eunuchs, where all Knight on the Green-e Lulu will Walk-er in Her-r Bloomer and the Bishop of the Tribe see the Fish-er done Brown.

There all ye that travel toward the rising sun will rest and refresh. The town pump will be placed in the Zem-Zem well and while the Arabs drink of the fountain of life, Sheik Cushman will chant his favorite Arabic song, "O du lieber Augustine," in which all will join in the chorus.

O du lieber Augustine, Augustine, Augustine,
O du lieber Augustine, Alles kumm plummff!
Das Geld is versoffen,
Die Frau is verlossen.
O du lieber Augustine, Alles kumm plummff!
Es ist mir Alles, Alles, Alles, Alles, Alles eins,
Ob ich Geld hab' oder keins!
Wenn ich Geld hab' bin ich lustig,
Wenn ich keins hab' bin ich durstig.
O du lieber Augustine, Alles kumm plummff!
